Georgetown Remains Open As Apocalypse Nears

Four Horsemen Manifest, Lava Flows, 'Liberal Leave' Policy Enforced

By Jay Farley

Despite the recent arrival of the Apocalypse and the virtual destruction of all mankind, University Provost James J. O'Donnell has decided that Georgetown University will remain open for business. "I don't see why we should cancel classes for a little fire and brimstone," O'Donnell said.

Commuting professors and students expressed anger after calling 687-SNOW to discover that the University remained open in lieu of impending disaster and death.

"First they made us come to school when there was 18 inches of ice on every street in town, and now this...Prospect Street is engulfed in lava that the Lord hath wrought! How am I supposed to walk to ICC? This is total bullshit," said Tom Davenport (MSB 05) who commutes from Northern Virginia.

Students living in Village A rooftop apartments witnessed the long-anticipated manifestation of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse as they rode down from clouds above Roslyn. The Horsemen brought famine, war, and pestilence to hordes of nonbelievers throughout the Washington DC metropolitan area.

"This is unbelievable...my family and friends are dead and now these crazy demons on horses are bestowing the wrath of the Lord upon my fellow classmates and I," said Davenport. "I can't believe they didn't cancel school."

"I just don't know how I'm going to finish my Statistics project, my group members have all been inflicted with a flesh-eating plague, and I have no idea what the assignment is," added Davenport.

The University is strongly considering enforcing its 'Liberal Leave' policy, which allows students who hath reaped the wrath of the Lord exemptions from schoolwork and class attendance. All other students are responsible for turning in homework, taking exams, and attending classes as the humankind is judged by the Creator.

Fox Unleashes New Reality Show 'Joe Terminal Cancer'

By Corky St. Clair

If you liked Fox's hit reality show 'Joe Millionaire,' then you'll love what's in store this fall's season... 'Joe Terminal Cancer.'

The new series will follow a format similar to 'Joe Millionaire.' A group of twenty women will compete for the affection of a lucky bachelor, who will in turn select his bride-to-be after a series of dates and tests. Just as in 'Joe Millionaire,' the bachelor has a secret that his female suitors don't know about. But this Joe's secret isn't his lack of money; his secret is that he has terminal cancer and has only three months to live.

"Boy, will those ladies be surprised when they find out that our handsome bachelor has a chronic illness that will kill him dead in the very near future," said a grinning Fox executive. "This will be a surprise that everyone in America can look forward to."

Shrewd Fox executives capitalized on the success of 'Joe Millionaire,' and created the sequel show with hopes of matching the first show's ratings.

“This time around, we needed a really shocking secret that could pose a true threat to the happiness of a new couple...something that would really challenge winner of Joe Terminal Cancer’s affection,” said a Fox executive. “And to that end, what better secret than a terminal case of cancer?” he added.

Fox, a network renowned for its insightful and astute programming, also has plans for developing more sequels including Joe AIDS, Joe Convicted Rapist, and Joe Homosexual.

A Message from the President

To the Georgetown University Community,

As you know, in the past eighteen months the University hasn’t done anything to enhance our emergency preparedness. Now, with the recent elevation of the Homeland Security threat level to High Condition (Orange), the University is operating at a decreased level of preparedness.

In the event of an emergency in the Washington, DC metropolitan area, you should get as far away as possible from Georgetown. In such an emergency, the University has no emergency plan. Anyone counting on us will be screwed. As events warrant, we will not know what to do, so just get ready to die. If we think of anything, we will provide updated information through broadcast e-mail, voicemail, and postings on the University website.

I encourage all members of the University community to be alert to your surroundings. If you see anything suspicious or out of the ordinary, please notify the Department of Public Safety at 687-4343 (687-HELP). But then again what is that really going to accomplish?

Thank you for your continued attention to our joint effort to maintain the insecurity of our community.

Sincerely,

John J. DeGioia

Dominos to Stop Ejaculating In Students' Pizzas

Fingernails, Hair, Dandruff Still Free

By Bob Sacamano

In an unexpected press release, Dominos Pizza announced that it will discontinue its longstanding policy of ejaculating in Georgetown students’ pizzas.

Dominos announced its plan to look into the ramifications of its student pizza ejaculation policy after many complains from GU students. After consulting a local marketing research firm, Dominos learned that, in general, people do not like their pizzas when soaked in semen.

While Georgetown administrators declared the non-ejaculation inquiry a victory for the Georgetown student body, some do not share that optimism. In a chilling scene outside of the Dominos franchise on Prospect Street, frantic students picketed, condemning Dominos’ decision. The students’ chant of “semen, or see my business leave,” was chanted in unison for almost two hours.

One picketer, Georgetown Tom Davenport (MSB 05), said, “pizza that has been ejaculated on several great tastes...a great injustice has been done here today.”

Although Dominos will strictly enforce its non-ejaculation policy, the pizza chain will continue to include fingernails, hair, and dandruff in students’ pizzas free of charge.

ACLU Defends Troll, Former Occupant of Go Card Office under Leavey Bridge

The Troll that previously lived in the Go Card office under the Leavey Center Bridge is suing Georgetown University. The Troll claims that he was unfairly and maliciously displaced him from his home. ACLU lawyer Roslyn Tilman described the Troll’s plight in a press conference yesterday.

“The troll has occupied that space undisturbed for years,” Tilman said. “It’s his home, and [he] wants it back...the University has no right to displace him just because he is a troll,” she added.

The Troll claims that University administrators began to move equipment into his lair in early August, and that his home had become GU’s Go Card headquarters by mid-September. He also claims that he was tricked into vacating his home around the same time.

“Trippity trop, trippity trop, went their little hooves,” said the Troll. “I asked [University administrators] who was trotting over my bridge, and the University’s lawyers promised me that a big goat was coming along for me to eat...next thing I knew, I was locked out of my own home.”

“Lies! All Lies!” Tillman interjected.

The Troll, outraged and on the brink of tears, told reporters that University administrators promised him that “a bigger goat was coming along...but he never came and my home has remained occupied by the Go Card staff ever since.”

“The university is clearly at fault in this incident,” Tilman said on camera, “God knows if this atrocity goes unchecked, trolls all over the country will be put at risk, not to mention that the Georgetown Troll will have to permanently relocate to his current position under Key Bridge.”

Since the press conference aired yesterday, the troll has received an offer from NBC to star in a made for TV movie depicting his struggle, which is to be titled ‘The Billy Goats Bluff.’ NBC plans on casting Hillary Clinton as the venomous, repulsive, cantankerous, and hideous Troll in her acting debut.

I'm Not Impressed by People with Two First Names

By David Wain

To tell you the truth, I'm not particularly impressed by people who have last names that could easily stand in as first names. You know the sort: George Michael, Matt Scott, Brian Nicholas...the list goes on and on.

These people are all over the place, flaunting their double first names like there was no tomorrow – but there is a tomorrow. The worst part about this disturbing trend is that throughout these people's entire lineage this same problem will be faced over and over again. Matt Scott will pop out Brian Scott, followed by Tom Scott then Dan Scott. Ahhh!!!!

Before I go to sleep every night, I pray that these double-named saps are genetically plagued with a prevalence of X chromosomes so this problem will eventually fade away.

But, the law of probability is not on my side. With this in mind, I urge the government to set up a Names Committee that shall approve or deny a family's application to name their newborn children. The Names Committee will not only hold this necessary prestige but also be forced to disallow certain names due to a high number of requests (come on, do we really need another John? Or William? Or Shaquille?).

Sometimes, I walk around thinking about how there really aren't enough Jasmynes or Ahmads.

So to all those who loathe this inane double first name business as much as I do, and would like to see a nomenclature system that discriminates against double-first-namers, come join me for the Names Protest February 15 on Capitol Hill, where we will burn Marv Albert in effigy.

The Georgetown Heckler Top Ten List

Top Ten Things to Do On Healy Lawn

1. Sacrifice a lamb to the omnipotent Judy Johnson of the Office of Student Conduct
2. Pretend that Lauinger Library is not the ugliest building ever created by mankind
3. Burn Coach Esherick in effigy
4. Pretend like you're not masturbating as the girls lacrosse team walks home from practice
5. Fall in and out of seizures produced by Pavlovian conditioning as the Healy bells ring
6. Scalp tickets to the all-too-frequent speeches by obscure South American dignitaries in Gaston Hall
(Tip: the best customers are Gucci-clad SFS students that love acting 'cultured')
7. Walk on the dead, muddy grass that you know will grow back if assholes like you would just stop walking on it
8. Say the 'F' word in front of a tour full of Georgetown hopefuls, feel cool because your parents aren't there
9. Streak as Birkenstock-wearing government majors look on in disgust
10. Have an awkward conversation with a professor
11. Summon the Devil, freak out Jesuits

Iraq Accused of Importing Uranium Rods and Poles

By Robert Duvale

Chief UN Weapons Inspector Hans Blix announced today that Iraq has been importing uranium rods and poles in an effort to build weapons of mass destruction.

“We know that Iraq has tried to acquire a couple of rods recently. A couple of the rods are long and thin, some are shorter and harder. A couple of days ago I found a massive rod in a Presidential Palace and it was all wet around the top, indicating that it may have been used recently. This was one of the biggest rods I’ve ever seen.”

UN Nuclear Inspector Muhammad Al-Baradei also has found some rods in Iraq.

“We found a huge, thick, pulsing rod hidden in a damp hole near Baghdad. The rod was deep in the hole, just stuck so far in that moist hole, that we had a hard time pulling the rod out.”

Several poles have also been found in Iraq. “We found an amazingly long and thin pole near the Tigris River,” said Blix. “This pole was long, thin, and lean.”

US President George W. Bush said the presence of rods and poles in Iraq is “troubling.”

Tom Davenport (CAS '03) criticized the Iraqi regime for leaving their rods out in the open. “I have a rod and I always keep it hidden. I would never leave my rod out in the open, bobbing up and down for everyone to see.”
